PETER and PAUL and the great Feast of Petertide.

Gilbert and Sullivan, Marks and Spencer, Laurel and Hardy, there are certain names which always seem to go together. It is the same in our ecclesiastical world, Philip and James, Simon and Jude, and Peter and Paul.

Remember the nursery rhyme, two little Dicky Birds sitting on a wall...

Both Peter and Paul became Disciples of Christ, and then either figuratively or literally abandoned him, before eventually returning. Another interpretation of the Mother Goose rhyme suggests that the wall upon which Peter and Paul sit represents the church, which was built on Peter the rock.

So why Peter and Paul... it is an ancient tradition, which maintains that these two apostles were martyred in Rome, on the same day, in the same year, although not on the same scaffold or in the same manner, crucifixion for one, decapitation for the other. The New Testament makes no mention of either event and although it reports that Paul eventually took up residence in Rome, there is no reference to Peter going there. It wasn't until the second Century that it was claimed he had lived in the city and had died there. What is clear from the New Testament accounts, is that these two characters were very different from each other, in regard to social class, status, and education, as well as in temperament and personality. So it is not altogether surprising to hear that the relationship between them could be uneasy and strained. That being said, it is significant that from quite early on, they were commemorated together and in early Christian art were frequently depicted together in Roman dress. Perhaps the early Christians thought of Peter and Paul as the 'two men' of the Christian Church in Rome, as it began to take shape... and to organise itself... in the first couple of centuries or so.

Be that as it may, what is beyond imagination is the remarkable speed with which the Christian message spread around the eastern Mediterranean and beyond, very quickly establishing a foothold in Rome itself. Generally speaking, when referring to these various Christian groups coming into existence where the Gospel was being preached for the first time, the New Testament writers tended to use language and metaphors derived from pastoral and agricultural practice. Saint Paul, for instance, speaks of the Christian community in Corinth as 'God's field', or when speaking to the elders of the Church in Ephesus, he refers to 'the flock'. Likewise there is the language of planting, sowing, watering, of tending and nurturing and shepherding - similar language used to describe that of the priest.

It is no surprise then that most Priests and Deacons are ordained at Petertide, on the great feast of St Peter and Paul. Ours is an ancient parish and we have two beautiful churches to boast of, one of which we believe dates back to Anglo Saxon times. I think today at least, we should think of some of the priests of this ancient parish, and the different aspects of the work of a priest, based on the work of Christ himself.

The priest is the evangelist who proclaims the good news of God's love in Christ, and shares the Bread of Life with those who respond, but the priest also needs to hear and respond more fully to that news, and to be fed and nourished by the sacraments. The priest is the shepherd, the pastor who comes alongside the people and lives among them, looking after them, from birth to death. But the priest is also one of Christ's flock. Being a good shepherd involves stability and commitment to the job in hand. This is all part of the work of the priest, and work that all the priests who have served this parish have had the privilege in sharing with you, and those who have gone before you.

In the same way the flock have a responsibility towards each other, to be shepherds to each other, to support, encourage, and care for each other. However, other imagery, other metaphors emerge, drawn not from agriculture, but from the building trade, the construction industry. On the feast of St Peter and Paul we have this other way of describing life together, in the Christian household of faith, this comes into focus. So in the Collect we pray that inspired by the teaching... and example of Peter and Paul, made one by the Spirit, we may 'stand firm upon the one foundation, Jesus Christ'. In the Gospels, Jesus declares, that he will build his Church... on the rock of Simon Peter's confession of faith in him as Messiah. Such language echoes what is said elsewhere. In the Letter to the Ephesians, the writer states that as 'members of the household of GOD' we are 'built upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, with Jesus Christ himself as the corner-stone'. The writer of the First letter of Peter says that Christians are 'living stones...built by God, into a spiritual house'.

When used for building, stones are not shapeless blocks of rock. They have to be carefully quarried and shaped, just like our very own fine Ackworth Stone. Then they are laid one upon another, on a firm foundation, to form a strong and solid edifice. Each stone rests upon those beneath, each helps to support and buttress its neighbour, and each helps to carry the weight of those who rest upon them. Not a single stone is idle, each has a job to do in holding the building together.

That is exactly how the Church of God, in all its local expressions, is meant to function. Built into God's Holy Temple as 'living stones', each of us is supported and strengthened by the others, and equally each one of us helping to bear the weight and burden of the others. All are meant to hold together by the power of mutual love, mutual forbearance, and mutual obedience, 'subject to one another, out of reverence for Christ'.

We readily think of God as Creator of all things. The writer of the letter to Hebrew puts it another way, when he refers to God as the 'Builder and Maker of all that is'. He labours patiently, and tirelessly, at drawing created existence into harmony and unity and beauty, he does all things well, for his is the wisdom which, reaching from one end to the other, orders all things mightily and sweetly. He is ceaselessly at work on us, seeking to draw us into love and unity with him, with one another, and with all things. We are his material, and a mixed lot we are, like all the different materials which were used in the making of our beautiful church buildings.

God has quarried us from the bedrock of human nature, and he works on each one of us with a spirit-level, plumb-line and measuring rod, as he seeks to shape and fashion us through the events and circumstances, the responsibilities and relationships of everyday life. It is 'with many a blow' that the heavenly Architect 'fashions well', these 'stones elect'.

Some of us are easier to deal with than others. Some of us are hard and resistant and unyielding. Some, for one reason or another, do not fit easily and readily into what God has in mind for us. Others do not weather well, but tend to crack and crumble, peel and flake under the stress of life's storms - the wind and the wet, the frost and the heat, of all the changes and chances of this fleeting world.

However, God's patience with us is endless and he never gives up on any of us. No matter how much we may despair of ourselves, he never despairs of us. He goes on believing in us and never loses hope that each one of us, by his grace, will finally fill to perfection our appointed place in the Great Church, the New Creation; each one resting firmly on the foundation of those who have gone before us; each one being a strong support to those around us; and each one helping to provide a firm base for those who will come after us.

'I will build my Church, upon this rock'. That is who we are, and what we are, 'God's building', a place where GOD is to be encountered, 'a spiritual house, a holy temple in the Lord'.

May God bless you and our Holy place.

Amen
